Text 1: f. 1 recto and verso, torn

Title: Florilegium, here "Superbia"

Language(s): Latin

Incipit: //<first line not legible> Quid prodest dispergendo dare pauperibus, pauperem fieri cum anima misera superbior efficitur divicias contempnendo quam fuerat possidendo? Augustinus in <libro ?> clericorum. Humilitas homines sanctis angelis

Explicit: cum prostratis in minimis gravius confunduntur. Gregorius in Moralia. Plerumque latet superbia et castitas innotescit atque ideo renata diu castitas//

Notes: This text printed by Joseph Lang, ed., Florilegii magni seu polyantheae floribus novissimis sparsae (Lyon, 1681) vol. 1, col. 2653, under the running headling, "Superbia." Given the very torn state of this fragment and the damage to the recto from glue (to use the leaf as a pastedown?), the text's incipit and explicit are reported from the printed book (although they are partially visible in the manuscript).
